

THE CHANGING FACE OF WORSHIP: THE CHURCH IN A POSTMODERN WORLD

One of the struggles for Christianity as a whole is as the world has changed, the church hasn't changed.

We live in an age when people no longer believe in absolute truth. Because of past violations, their ability to trust is virtually nonexistent. Art and beauty are preeminent. It's music, images, movement. It's all things aesthetic, not what can be proven, but what can be felt and experienced. Churches are finding that more and more people are looking elsewhere for spiritual answers. As followers of Christ, the church has been called to embrace this challenge, to build a bridge to this post-modern generation, and to think in new ways about how to convey their unchanging message.
